Championing the field of engineering education through innovation and research is both important and courageous. It is important because it's critical to the development of the profession; and it's courageous because in Canada, the field is still nascent. Innovation and research in engineering education are the agents of change. Innovation in the classroom and dedication to research in a fledgling field at the beginning of an academic career will grow the field of engineering education in Canada; people on this frontier need to be supported and celebrated.

Process of Selection:

- The NAC will seek out a yearly nominee and develop a nomination, as they see fit
- NAC will prepare a file to support each nomination
- NAC will make a recommendation to the CEEA-ACEG Board
- The Board will render a final decision based on the nominee's file and the NAC's recommendation
- Nominees whose applications are rejected can be nominated again in future years
